Johnny the Explorer

Johnny was three when he ran away from home for the first time．Somebody left the garden gate open．Johnny wandered out，crossed some fields and，two hours later，arrived in the next village．He was just able to give his name and address．

By the time be was seven，Johnny used to disappear from home two to three times a year．Sometimes he covered quite long distances on foot．Sometimes he got on a bus or even a train，and simply sat there until someone asked for his ticket．Generally the police brought him home．“Why do you do it?”they used to ask．“I just like seeing places，”Johnny told them．

Johnny continued to “see places”although everyone tried to stop him．His parents used to watch him closely，and so did his teachers；but sooner or later Johnny managed to slip away．As he grew older，his favorite trick was to hide on a long distance truck．Sometimes he trayelled hundreds of miles before anyone discovered him．

It is hardly surprising that eventually Johnny managed to board a plane．He was twelve at the time．It was a cargo plane and a few hours later，Johnny found himself in Cairo．How did he get on board? No one knows! According to Johnny himself，it was easy：he just went into the airport，walked along some passages and got on board the nearest plane．

In spite of all this，Johnny did well at school．He enjoyed mathematics and languages and，perhaps not surprisingly，he was especially good at geography．“What do you want to be when you grow up?” his teachers asked him．“An explorer!”

he answered. “But it，s difficult to become an explorer in this modern age，”they tried to tell him. But it was no use：Johnny knew what he wanted!

Just before he left school，Johnny saw a notice in a daily paper. A long journey was about to go to Brazil to travel up the Amazon River. There were jobs for three young people“willing to work hard and with a sense of adventure”. Johnny applied，and two months later，he was on his way to Brazil.

Editor Henry Slocum，

I read your May 10th article in the local newspaper Honesdale Times about electronic books，or e-books，with great interest. You made several good points about the disadvantages of e-books. You may have overlooked，however，some of the ways in which they are superior to traditional books. Yes，e-books are expensive，but they are also convenient. In addition，due to their environment-friendly nature, e-books have the potential to change our planet for the better.

E-books, for anyone who is unfamiliar with the term，are about the same size and shape as regular books. They have a large screen in the middle，however. This screen shows the reader a page of text that has been downloaded from a computer. Once the reader has finished reading the page on the e-book screen. he or she scrolls down to see a new page. The process continues until the entire book has been read.

As you pointed out. Mr. Slocum，it's great to lie on a warm，sandy beach with a book. You can do that just as easily with an e-book as you can with a traditional paper book. In fact，because e-books are so light, you can carry them anywhere. Say，for example，that you like to read on the bus. Which would you rather carry with you-a heavy 800-page novel，or an e-book that weighs only a few ounces?

Another important advantage is offered by e-books as well. They are more environment friendly than traditional books. At present，thousands of trees are cut down each year to meet the publishing industry’s demand for paper. Books that don’t sell are eventually returned to the Dublisher and destroyed. This terrible waste could be avoided if everyone used e-books，which require no paper.

Sincerely，

David Eng

Losing weight comes with a lot of health benefits-including making your brain sharper.

Yes，it turns out that overweight may damage cognitive functions such as memory and attention. There have been few studies of overweight and cognitive functioning，possibly because it is generally believed that it is not a primary risk cause for poor cognitive performance. Losing weight，therefore，may help improve these mental functions，according to a new research led by John Gunstad，assistant professor of psychology at Kent State University.

Growing evidence suggests that being fat is linked to cognitive deficits(缺陷). So Gunstad and his team guessed that losing weight might improve mental function. For their study，they measured memory and attention in a group of l 50 overweight participants，some of whom had some kind of operation for weight loss and some did not. All of the volunteers completed mental skills tests to assess their abilities of memory and attention at the beginning of the study，and again 12 weeks later. To begin with. about 24％of the patients showed damaged learning and 23％showed signs of poor memory when tested. At the end of the study，those who had lost weight after operation improved their scores into the average or above average range for cognitive functions. Scores for the volunteers who didn't lose weight dropped even further.

The study helped Gunstad to find out whether losing weight had any effect on mental function. Now that he's seen the positive effect that weight loss can have on memory and attention，he says he will next study those who choose to lose weight by the traditional way-eating healthier and getting more active. He expects that losing weight in this way will have a similarly positive effect on the brain. "If we can improve the condition with operations，then we can probably produce the same change with behavioral weight loss as well，"he says.

63. There is less research on overweight and cognitive functions because researchers _____

A. believe overweight only affects our body B. have focused on ways to sharpen people's mind

C. do not consider overweight a main cause for low cognitive ability

D. are clear about the relation between weight and mental functions

64. The result of Gunstad's study shows that _____

A. losing weight has little effect on people's memory

B. losing weight can improve people's mental functions

C. overweight people are likely to have psychology problems

D. overweight people's abilities of concentration differ greatly

65. What is Gunstad planning to prove next in his research?

A. Slim people are smarter than overweight people.

B. Healthy diet is better than exercise in losing weight.

C. Traditional ways of losing weight are better than operation

D. Overweight people will get smarter by taking more exercise.

66. Which of the following is the best title for the text?

A. Body Weight and Health　　B. Losing Weight by Operation

C. Ways to Improve Mental Functions　　D. Losing Weight to Sharpen Your Mind

Seeing in Stereo

Have you wondered why you have two eyes and why they are set close together on the front of your face? The reasons are simple and important to the way you see the rest of your world.

Your eyes are like two small cameras. A camera catches an image(影像)of an object and records it on film. Similarly，when you look at something，each eye takes in what it sees and sends this image to the back of the eyeball. Because your eyes are set close together，they view the world from about the same height but from slightly different angles. Working as a team，the eyes send the images to your brain，which puts them together into a single，centered image.

Seeing in stereo means seeing with two eyes working together，which is called stereoscopic sight. This allows you to view the world in three dimensions，or 3-D. Seeing depth helps you to judge the distance between you and the objeets you see and to adjust to the changing angle at which you see something as you move closer to or farther away from it. If images are coming from only one eye, however，only two of these dimensions-height and width-can be perceived. A world seen with one eye is thus two-dimensional，as in a photograph.

Now consider why your two eyes are on the front of your face．Think of other animals with this same arrangement．They are all animals that hunt，like lions and wolves．Their eyes face directly in front of them．This provides a field of sight about 180 degrees wide，which is called binocular sight．On the other hand，animals that are hunted have eyes on the sides of the head，which Drovides nearly 360-degree field of sight．In order to stay alive，they need to see things coming from the sides and from behind．However，without stereoscopic sight，they have difficulty determining how far a danger is．

With sight both stereoscopic and binocular，humans share with animal hunters the ability to see from side to side and to accurately determine the distance．If you think it would be great to have another type of sight，perhaps with hundreds of tiny eyes like many insects do，think again! Each tinv insect eye sees only a tiny part．Besides，what if you needed glasses? Be glad for the eyesight that you have．

67．According to the passage，an eye is like a camera because both _____

A．can record images B．can imagine objects

C．provide centered images D．work at the same height

68．Stereoscopic sight is a result of having_____

A．a three-hundred-sixty-degree field of sight B．hundreds of eyes，all seeing parts of an image

C．two eyes close to one another that work together

D．one eye on either side of the head，each seeing a different image

69．The underlined word “perceived” in Paragraph 3 means _____

A．set B．taken C．seen D．understood

70．The author implies that “seeing in stereo” _____

A．is similar to the way cameras work B．is an ability humans are fortunate to have

C．would be better for a wider field of sight D．helps people to have better sight than animals

第二节(共 5 小题；每小题 2 分，共 10 分)

根据短文内容，从短文后的七个选项中选出能填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

Puppy Food

A puppy(young dog)is a precious addition to any family．The excitement of bringing home a little furry friend will always live in our memories．Like all of us，though，your puppy must have adequate nutrition right from the start to make certain that it'll have a long and healthy life．

71 You might ask yourself what is the best for your new pet with all of the different varieties on the market in all of their attractive packaging. Some dry food produced specially for puppies is the best for the development of their teeth．72

Contrary to the belief of many first-time puppy owners，it is not always the best idea to purchase food that is too high in calcium(钙)，protein，and vitamin levels．73 In addition, a high intake of calcium is associated with bone disease in large-breed dogs．If you have a “smallbreed” puppy，you can buy that kind of food．

It is not a good idea to feed the food you eat to your puppy frequently，as your puppy may become selective about food．74 Some people think that dog biscuits and other treats are fine, but they should not be a main part of puppy’s diet．

Young puppies should be fed three times a day．Each puppy is unique，however，so feeding them twice a day is acceptable．After ten to twelve weeks of age，feed your puppy twice per day．Allow your puppy to eat as much as he would like in fifteen minutes．75 If you let your puppy eat too much or too often by keeping food accessible at all times，he may become overweight and have health problems as an adult．Like humans，your puppy will not enjoy the food any longer if it is there at all times

A．Pick up the dish with the remaining food.

B．Proper food is a basic necessity for your puppies.

C．Remember to give your puppy the food he would like to have.

D．It can also cause an upset stomach due to an unbalanced diet.

E．A further benefit is that it is less expensive than the canned food.

F．One example is that extra helpings of nutrients do harm to digestive organs.

G．It’good to provide the extra nutrients a puppy needs until he grows larger.

Last week, our class organized a voluntary activity in subway cars.

On Friday, we held a class meeting to discuss what we could do at the weekend. Some suggested telling passengers to keep the subway cars clean, while the others preferred to pick up adlets and litter. Finally we decided to do the latter.

At 9:00 on Sunday morning, plastic bags in our hands, we gathered at the school gate and headed for the subway station. Upon arrival, we started to work. It was not so easy as we had expected because some adlets were stuck to the floor and seats. Seeing what we were doing, many passengers smiled at us in approval. Soon the subway cars became clean again. Two hours later, our work was finished. When we piled the litter bags on the platform, a conductor praised us with her thumb up. Though tired, we felt proud and happy.
