From sausage rolls to sweets and a coffee with a bin, there were many things that made Greg Robinson smile.

When the father-of-two, who was in his 50s, died suddenly in April 2021, his family's life was turned upside down.

Greg ran a gift shop in his hometown of Donaghadee. Whether it was at work, walking the dog, with his local flute band or just out in his belayed town, his family said Greg made time for those in need. Now, on the week of his first anniversary, his family shared some of the things that made him smile with their community.

"We wanted to plan something together that allowed us to put our energy into something positive and give us something practical to do which we knew would have an impact on others," they told the reporter.

"We knew that by making others smile, we in turn would feel the benefit of that too. We have realised the importance of little things that have made us smile throughout the past year."

As Greg loved his town and the community, all the gifts were purchased locally. Among them are vouchers (代金券) for a bakery, for some of his favourite sausage rolls, an ice-cream shop where he used to buy a quarter of sweets, and a cafe because "a wee coffee and a bun would have made dad's face light up with excitement".

"When someone dies, it is often the case that people are scared to mention the loved one in case it makes you sad, but the journey has taught us that this isn't the case. The wonderful memories of dad shared by our community bring so much comfort," his family said.

"We love those times when we hear how dad had impacted their lives, from showing kindness as a teenager at high school, to chatting away to customers in his shop," they added.

For Greg's children, they will be forever grateful for their dad teaching them "to focus on the positive parts of the day, looking for ways that we can express gratitude for everyday things".

25. What do we know about Greg from the first three paragraphs?

A Greg was often ready to help others.

B. Greg had a great passion for cooking.

C. Greg earned his living by playing in a band.

D. Greg's death had little impact on his family.

26. How did the community react after receiving the gifts?

A. They gathered and comforted Greg's family.

B. They expressed sadness about Greg's death.

C. They were still afraid to talk about Greg.

D. They shared good memories of Greg.

27. What would be the best title for this passage?

A. An Act of Kindness in Memory of Greg

B. Unusual Ways to Thank Greg's Community

C. A Huge Celebration of Greg's Family Reunion

D. Special Gifts to Record the Family Life of Greg

It shouldn't come as news to anyone that the planet is moving quickly towards a climate emergency. And fast fashion certainly plays its part in this.

Fast fashion brands, which release hundreds of new styles every week, have caused trends cycles to speed up rapidly, leading to overproduction and overconsumption. British shoppers are buying twice as much as we did a decade ago and both brands and consumers are throwing away "unfashionable" clothing more often—over £300,000 of it ends up in landfill every year. How do we solve this issue?

One answer lies in the new generation of made-to-order brands making their way into the mainstream. These brands make clothes only as and when they're ordered, and because there's no overproduction, less unwanted stock ends up in landfills. They also promote a slower fashion model, with pieces taking between three weeks and three months to arrive once purchased. The focus is on creating special, well-made pieces for consumers to treasure for years to come.

Made-to-order fashion is nothing new. Until the mid-20th century, it was the norm. However, the 1960s brought about the dawn of fast fashion and a shift in our relationship with our clothes. The value once placed on craftsmanship and quality was replaced by the desire for low cost and volume, resulting in cut-cost production and the attitude that clothing should be cheap and disposable.

Of course, made-to-order fashion has continued to exist alongside this, though research clearly shows that fast fashion prevails (盛行). Cue a made-to-order brand bringing bespoke (定制) back to the mainstream. Spanish brand Alas features a slow business model. It takes orders each week which are then handmade and delivered in about three weeks. It also revolves around an on-demand production process that rewards consumers for "pre-planned responsible shopping." Every week, they launch a new drop, available to pre-order for a discounted rate for a limited time. From pre-order, Alas determines how popular each new item is and calculates how many units should be produced to fulfill both pre-orders and future full-price orders, therefore reducing the overproduction of stock.

With made-to-order brands growing in popularity, it begs the question—could this be the dawn of a new, environmentally responsible era? The answer is self-evident.

28. What do the first two paragraphs mainly show?

A. Our strong desire for fashion.

B. The fast development of fashion industry.

C. The urgent need for a different fashion model.

D. The advantages and disadvantages of fast fashion.

29. What does the underlined word “this” in Paragraph 5 refer to?

A. The shadow of fast fashion.

B. The value placed on quality.

C. The shift towards a green lifestyle.

D. The criticism for cheapness and quantity.

30. What does the example of Spanish brand Alas tell us?

A. The reward mechanism is a must in slow fashion.

B. It takes patience and thought to buy made-to-order items.

C. The pre-order model reduces the cost of purchasing brands.

D. Consumers have a say about how their orders are produced.

31. As for the future of made-to-order fashion, the author is _____ .

A. anxious　　B. confident

C. puzzled　　D. curious

People’s distrust in science has led many scientists to take up arms (or at least keyboards) to defend their enterprise. But in their efforts to fight back against science denial, some scientists say things that just aren’t true-and you can’t build trust if the things you are saying are not trustworthy.

One popular move is to insist that science is right-full stop-and that once we discover the truth about the world, we are done. Or, as famous physicist Steven Smith said, “Even though a scientific theory is in a sense a social consensus (共识), it is unlike any other sort of consensus in that it is culture-free and permanent.” Well, no. Even a modest familiarity with the history of science offers many examples of matters that scientists thought they had resolved, only to discover that they needed to be reconsidered.

Another popular move is to say scientific findings are true because scientists use “the scientific method.” But we can never actually agree on what that method is. Some will say it is the observation and description of the world. Others will say it is the experimental method. Recently a prominent scientist claimed the scientific method was to avoid fooling oneself into thinking something is true that is not.

Each of these views has its merits, but if the claim is that any one of these is the scientific method, then they all fail. In point of fact, the methods of science have varied between disciplines and across time.

In my view, the biggest mistake scientists make is to claim that this is all somehow simple and therefore to imply that anyone who doesn’t get it is stupid. Science is not simple, and neither is the natural world; therein lies the challenge of science communication. What we do is both hard and, often hard to explain. Our efforts to understand and characterize the natural world are just that: efforts. Because we’re human, we often fall flat. The good news is that when that happens, we pick ourselves up, brush ourselves off, and get back to work.

Scientific theories are not perfect replicas of reality, but we have good reason to believe that they capture significant elements of it. And experience reminds us that when we ignore reality, it sooner or later comes back to bite us.

32. Paragraph 2 stresses that _____.

A. scientific theories may change with time

B. the familiarity with science's history matters

C. the unresolved matters should be reconsidered

D. a social consensus is culture-free and permanent

33. According to the passage, the author might agree that_____.

A. it is critical for scientists to stay true to reality

B. science puts an accurate interpretation on nature

C the definitions of the scientific method are outdated

D. the credibility of scientific theories is underestimated

34. How does the author persuade readers in this passage?

A. By stressing the importance of science.

B. By comparing opposite opinions on science.

C. By questioning the way scientific discoveries are made.

D. By pointing out the fault in claims made by some scientists.

第二节(共 5 小题;每小题 2 分，共 10 分)

How many times have you wondered about how much better things might have been if the younger you had made different decisions? Or, have you breathed a sigh of relief when you recognize that one of your lucky choices ended up much better off than you might have been, if things had gone a different way?

____35____It is the birthplace of emotions such as regret, gratitude, and guilt. Picturing an alternative outcome to what has actually happened in one's life holds an irresistible appeal, even when it leads to unhappiness. It is therefore not surprising that it has become a hot topic of research in social psychology.

Counterfactual thinking often plays out in real-time on national television after a natural disaster.____36____ The victims are usually shaken and highly emotional, and they have often lost everything that they owned. And yet, we commonly hear them use words such as "lucky" or "grateful" to describe their feelings.

____37____ If the person had really been lucky, wouldn't they still have a house and have been spared from all of the grief they must now endure? Some psychologists have argued that one of the benefits of counterfactual thinking is that it can be an effective tool for making us more resilient (迅速复苏的). ____38____ That paves the way for positive emotions that might help them through a very dark time in their lives.

Counterfactual thinking is simply part of who we are. ____39____ Many psychologists believe that it exists to helps us crystallize (变明确) the goals that are most important to us and to improve our ability to wisely choose future courses of action.

A. At first glance, this response does not make much sense.

B. This type of mental "what-ifism" is called counterfactual thinking.

C. Even though it sometimes makes us sad, it can also do us some good.

D. The imagination of a life has been the inspiration for dozens of movies.

E. News reporters frequently interview survivors who have barely escaped with their lives.

F. The more important the event is, the more intense our counterfactual thinking about it will be.

G. The mind of the counterfactual thinker can easily imagine circumstances that would have been even worse.

第三部分 书面表达(共两节，32 分)

第一节(共 4 小题;第 40、41 题各 2 分，第 42 题 3 分，第 43 题 5 分，共 12 分)

阅读下面短文，根据题目要求用英文回答问题。请在答题卡指定区域作答。

For many, theater is more than entertainment; it is a vital way to build psychological skills-especially empathy, or our ability to share, understand and care about others' emotions.

Research found that after watching theater, audience expressed more empathy for the characters onstage. The plays also changed behavior. Researchers gave audience members the option to donate some of their payment to charity. After seeing the plays, audience members donated more money to charity-whether or not the charity was related to the topics in the plays.

Why does live theater have these effects? Sitting in the dark watching a play can make us forget our own worries and transport us into the life and mind of a different person. We found that the more people reported feeling "immersed" or "lost" in the play, the more their beliefs and behaviors were changed by it.

A classic finding in social psychology is that repeated, positive encounters with people unlike ourselves can build empathy. Many of us have too few experiences-or too little interest-in creating such encounters. Theaters provide the chance to see the experiences of people who differ from us in environments unlike our own.

The arts are essential to human flourishing(繁荣).As we move beyond the pandemic, we will need to focus on healing collectively and connecting better. Providing greater access to the arts-and using them to share stories across cultural and social difference-will be an important part of this path to recovery.

40. What is empathy?

41. According to the research, what effects did live theater have on audience?

42. Please decide which part is false in the following statement, then underline it and explain why.

Theater can build empathy because it offers us encounters that remind us of our past experiences.

43. Besides watching live theater. what other way(s) can help to build empathy? (In about 40 words)

From sausage rolls to sweets and a coffee with a bin, there were many things that made Greg Robinson smile.

When the father-of-two, who was in his 50s, died suddenly in April 2021, his family’s life was turned upside down.

Greg ran a gift shop in his hometown of Donaghadce. Whether it was at work, walking the dog, with his local flute band or just out in his belayed town, his family said Greg made time for those in need. Now, on the week of his first anniversary, his family shared some of the things that made him smile with their community.

“We wanted to plan something together that allowed us to put our energy into something positive and give us something practical to do, which we knew would have an impact on others,” they told the reporter.

“We knew that by making others smile, we in turn would feel the benefit of that too. We have realised the importance of little things that have made us smile throughout the past year.”

As Greg loved his town and the community, all the gifts were purchased locally. Among them are vouchers (代金券) for a bakery, for some of his favourite sausage rolls, an ice-cream shop where he used to buy a quarter of sweets, and a cafe because “a wee coffee and a bun would have made dad’s face light up with excitement”.

“When someone dies, it is often the case that people are scared to mention the loved one in case it makes you sad, but the journey has taught us that this isn’t the case. The wonderful memories of dad shared by our community bring so much comfort,” his family said.

“We love those times when we hear how dad had impacted their lives, from showing kindness as a teenager at high school, to chatting away to customers in his shop,” they added.

For Greg’s children, they will be forever grateful for their dad teaching them “to focus on the positive parts of the day, looking for ways that we can express gratitude for everyday things”.

25. What do we know about Greg from the first three paragraphs?

A. Greg was often ready to help others.

B. Greg had a great passion for cooking.

C. Greg earned his living by playing in a band.

D. Greg’s death had little impact on his family.

26. How did the community react after receiving the gifts?

A. They gathered and comforted Greg’s family.

B. They expressed sadness about Greg’s death.

C. They were still afraid to talk about Greg.

D. They shared good memories of Greg.

27. What would be the best title for this passage?

C

It shouldn’t come as news to anyone that the planet is moving quickly towards a climate emergency. And fast fashion certainly plays its part in this.

Fast fashion brands, which release hundreds of new styles every week, have caused trends cycles to speed up rapidly, leading to overproduction and overconsumption. British shoppers are buying twice as much as we did a decade ago and both brands and consumers are throwing away “unfashionable” clothing more often—over £300,000 of it ends up in landfill every year. How do we solve this issue?

One answer lies in the new generation of made-to-order brands making their way into the mainstream. These brands make clothes only as and when they’re ordered, and because there’s no overproduction, less unwanted stock ends up in landfills. They also promote a slower fashion model, with pieces taking between three weeks and three months to arrive once purchased. The focus is on creating special, well-made pieces for consumers to treasure for years to come.

Made-to-order fashion is nothing new. Until the mid-20th century, it was the norm. However, the 1960s brought about the dawn of fast fashion and a shift in our relationship with our clothes. The value once placed on craftsmanship and quality was replaced by the desire for low cost and volume, resulting in cut-cost production and the attitude that clothing should be cheap and disposable.

Of course, made-to-order fashion has continued to exist alongside this, though research clearly shows that fast fashion prevails (盛行). Cue a made-to-order brand bringing bespoke (定制) back to the mainstream. Spanish brand Alas features a slow business model. It takes orders each week which are then handmade and delivered in about three weeks. It also revolves around an on-demand production process that rewards consumers for “pre-planned responsible shopping.” Every week, they launch a new drop, available to pre-order for a discounted rate for a limited time. From pre-order, Alas determines how popular each new item is and calculates how many units should be produced to fulfill both pre-orders and future full-price orders, therefore reducing the overproduction of stock.

With made-to-order brands growing in popularity, it begs the question—could this be the dawn of a new, environmentally responsible era? The answer is self-evident.

28. What do the first two paragraphs mainly show?

A. Our strong desire for fashion.

B. The fast development of fashion industry.

C. The urgent need for a different fashion model.

D. The advantages and disadvantages of fast fashion.

29. What does the underlined word “this” in Paragraph 5 refer to?

A. The shadow of fast fashion.

B. The value placed on quality.

C. The shift towards a green lifestyle.

D. The criticism for cheapness and quantity.

30. What does the example of Spanish brand Alas tell us?

A. The reward mechanism is a must in slow fashion.

B. It takes patience and thought to buy made-to-order items.

C. The pre-order model reduces the cost of purchasing brands.

D. Consumers have a say about how their orders are produced.

31. As for the future of made-to-order fashion, the author is _____ .

A. anxious　　B. confident

C puzzled　　D. curious

【导语】这是一篇说明文。文章主要介绍了快时尚导致生产过剩和消费过度，对环境产生影响，在这种情况下，定制时尚受到人们的欢迎，它为一个新的、对环境负责的时代带来曙光。

【28 题详解】

推理判断题。根据第一段内容“It shouldn’t come as news to anyone that the planet is moving quickly towards a climate emergency. And fast fashion certainly plays its part in this.”（对于任何人来说，地球正在迅速走向气候紧急状态都不应该成为新闻。而快时尚无疑在其中发挥了作用。）和第二段关键句“Fast fashion brands, which release hundreds of new styles every week, have caused trends cycles to speed up rapidly, leading to overproduction and overconsumption.”（快时尚品牌每周发布数百种新款式，导致潮流周期迅速加快，导致生产过剩和消费过度。）可知，快时尚品牌　经营模式导致生产过剩和消费过度，进而加快了气候危机，因而，我们需要一种不同于快时尚的时尚模式，来解决这个问题，由此可知，前两段主要展示了对一个不同的时尚模式的迫切需要。故选 C 项。

【29 题详解】

词句猜测题。根据第四段内容“Made-to-order fashion is nothing new. Until the mid-20th century, it was the norm. However, the 1960s brought about the dawn of fast fashion and a shift in our relationship with our clothes. The value once placed on craftsmanship and quality was replaced by the desire for low cost and volume, resulting in cut-cost production and the attitude that clothing should be cheap and disposable.”（定制时尚并不是什么新鲜事。直到 20 世纪中叶，这才成为常态。然而，20 世纪 60 年代带来了快时尚的曙光，以及我们与服装关系的转变。曾经重视工艺和质量的价值被对低成本和低批量的渴望所取代，导致了低成本生产和人们认为服装应廉价且一次性的态度。）和画线词后文“though research clearly shows that fast fashion prevails”（尽管研究清楚地表明快速时尚盛行）可知，上文介绍了定制时尚是先于快时尚出现的，后来快时尚出现，但定制时尚仍然存在，由此可知，画线单词所在句指的是定制时尚仍然存在于快时尚的阴影之下，“this”代指“快时尚的阴影”。故选 A 项。

【30 题详解】

推理判断题。根据第五段关键句“Spanish brand Alas features a slow business model. It takes orders each week which are then handmade and delivered in about three weeks. It also revolves around an on-demand production process that rewards consumers for “pre-planned responsible shopping.””（西班牙品牌 Alas 以缓慢的商业模式为特点。它每周接受订单，然后手工制作并在大约三周内交付。它还围绕一个按需生产流程展开，奖励“预先计划的负责任购物”的消费者。）

可知，西班牙品牌 Alas 号召消费者进行预先计划的、负责任的购物，由此可知，西班牙品牌 Alas 的例子告诉我们购买定制商品需要耐心和深思熟虑，要进行负责任的购物，并在购物后等待大约三周时间。故选 B 项。

【31 题详解】

推理判断题。根据最后一段内容“With made-to-order brands growing in popularity, it begs the question—could this be the dawn of a new, environmentally responsible era? The answer is self-evident.”（随着定制品牌越来越受欢迎，人们不禁要问，这是否是一个新的、对环境负责的时代的曙光？答案不言而喻。）可知，作者在文章中介绍定制品牌越来越受欢迎，并且对环境有利，再结合“The answer is self-evident”可知，作者认为定制时尚会为一个新的、对环境负责的时代带来曙光，由此可推断出，关于定制时尚的未来，作者是有自信的。故选 B 项。

People’s distrust in science has led many scientists to take up arms (or at least keyboards) to defend their enterprise. But in their efforts to fight back against science denial, some scientists say things that just aren’t true-and you can’t build trust if the things you are saying are not trustworthy.

One popular move is to insist that science is right-full stop-and that once we discover the truth about the world, we are done. Or, as famous physicist Steven Smith said, “Even though a scientific theory is in a sense a social consensus (共识), it is unlike any other sort of consensus in that it is culture-free and permanent.” Well, no. Even a modest familiarity with the history of science offers many examples of matters that scientists thought they had resolved, only to discover that they needed to be reconsidered.

Another popular move is to say scientific findings are true because scientists use “the scientific method.” But we can never actually agree on what that method is. Some will say it is the observation and description of the world. Others will say it is the experimental method. Recently a prominent scientist claimed the scientific method was to avoid fooling oneself into thinking something is true that is not.

Each of these views has its merits, but if the claim is that any one of these is the scientific method, then they all fail. In point of fact, the methods of science have varied between disciplines and across time.

In my view, the biggest mistake scientists make is to claim that this is all somehow simple and therefore to imply that anyone who doesn’t get it is stupid. Science is not simple, and neither is the natural world; therein lies the challenge of science communication. What we do is both hard and, often hard to explain. Our efforts to understand and characterize the natural world are just that: efforts. Because we’re human, we often fall flat. The good news is that when that happens, we pick ourselves up, brush ourselves off, and get back to work.

Scientific theories are not perfect replicas of reality, but we have good reason to believe that they capture significant elements of it. And experience reminds us that when we ignore reality, it sooner or later comes back to bite us.

32. Paragraph 2 stresses that _____.

A. scientific theories may change with time

B. the familiarity with science’s history matters

C. the unresolved matters should be reconsidered

D. a social consensus is culture-free and permanent

33. According to the passage, the author might agree that_____.

A. it is critical for scientists to stay true to reality

B. science puts an accurate interpretation on nature

C. the definitions of the scientific method are outdated

D. the credibility of scientific theories is underestimated

34. How does the author persuade readers in this passage?

A. By stressing the importance of science.

B. By comparing opposite opinions on science.

C. By questioning the way scientific discoveries are made.

D. By pointing out the fault in claims made by some scientists.

【33 题详解】

推理判断题。根据第一段“People’s distrust in science has led many scientists to take up arms (or at least keyboards) to defend their enterprise.(人们对科学的不信任导致许多科学家拿起武器（或者至少是键盘）来捍卫他们的事业)”可知，人们对科学是不信任的；再根据最后一段“Scientific theories are not perfect replicas of reality, but we have good reason to believe that they capture significant elements of it.(科学理论并不是现实的完美复制品，但我们有充分的理由相信，它们捕捉到了现实的重要元素)”可知，科学是被低估了。故选 D。

【34 题详解】

推理判断题。根据第五段“In my view, the biggest mistake scientists make is to claim that this is all somehow simple and therefore to imply that anyone who doesn’t get it is stupid.(在我看来，科学家们所犯的最大错误就是声称这一切在某种程度上都很简单，从而暗示那些不理解这一点的人都是愚蠢的)”及全文可知，文章在开头指出科学家们为反驳人们对科学的不信任而做出的努力中有不真实的部分，然后举例引出作者对于科学家犯的错的看法：他们简单化了科学和自然。最后作者提出科学很重要，因为科学把握住了现实的要素。由此可知，作者使用了科学家的错误看法作为反例来说服读者。故选 D。

第二节(共 5 小题;每小题 2 分，共 10 分)

根据短文内容，从短文后的七个选项中选出能填入空白处的最佳选项，并在答题卡上将该项涂黑。选项中有两项为多余选项。

How many times have you wondered about how much better things might have been if the younger you had made different decisions? Or, have you breathed a sigh of relief when you recognize that one of your lucky choices ended up much better off than you might have been, if things had gone a different way?

____35____It is the birthplace of emotions such as regret, gratitude, and guilt. Picturing an alternative outcome to what has actually happened in one’s life holds an irresistible appeal, even when it leads to unhappiness. It is therefore not surprising that it has become a hot topic of research in social psychology.

Counterfactual thinking often plays out in real-time on national television after a natural disaster.____36____ The victims are usually shaken and highly emotional, and they have often lost everything that they owned. And yet, we commonly hear them use words such as “lucky” or “grateful” to describe their feelings.

____37____ If the person had really been lucky, wouldn’t they still have a house and have been spared from all of the grief they must now endure? Some psychologists have argued that one of the benefits of counterfactual thinking is that it can be an effective tool for making us more resilient (迅速复苏的). ____38____ That paves the way for positive emotions that might help them through a very dark time in their lives.

Counterfactual thinking is simply part of who we are. ____39____ Many psychologists believe that it exists to helps us crystallize (变明确) the goals that are most important to us and to improve our ability to wisely choose future courses of action.

A. At first glance, this response does not make much sense.

B. This type of mental “what-ifism” is called counterfactual thinking.

C. Even though it sometimes makes us sad, it can also do us some good.

D. The imagination of a life has been the inspiration for dozens of movies.

E. News reporters frequently interview survivors who have barely escaped with their lives.

F. The more important the event is, the more intense our counterfactual thinking about it will be.

G. The mind of the counterfactual thinker can easily imagine circumstances that would have been even worse.

【35~39 题答案】

【导语】本文为一篇说明文。文章主要介绍了在生活中，人们总是会反事实思维，总在想如果当时选择了另一个选项会是怎样呢？心理学家认为反事实思维对我们的生活是有益的，能够帮助我们更明智地选择未来的方向。

【35 题详解】

根据下文“It is the birthplace of emotions such as regret, gratitude, and guilt. (它是后悔、感激和内疚等情绪的发源地)”中出现了“it”，说明上文是提及了一个概念或者一个内容。选项 B“This type of mental “what-ifism” is called counterfactual thinking.(这种心理上的“如果论”被称为反事实思维)”既和第一段呼应，指出第一段中的“如果论”，又直接引出本文的关键词“counterfactual thinking”，也就是空后的“it”。故选 B。

【36 题详解】

根据下文“The victims are usually shaken and highly emotional, and they have often lost everything that they owned. And yet, we commonly hear them use words such as “lucky” or “grateful" to describe their feelings. (受害者通常浑身颤抖和高度情绪化，他们往往失去了他们所拥有的一切。然而，我们经常听到他们用“幸运”或“感激”这样的词来描述自己的感受)”中提到了受害者，并且提到了他们的话，由此可推断是有人在采访他们。选项 E“News reporters frequently interview survivors who have barely escaped with their lives.(新闻记者经常采访那些死里逃生的幸存者)”引出下文这些人的话，符合文意。故选 E。

【37 题详解】

根据上文“And yet, we commonly hear them use words such as “lucky” or “grateful" to describe their feelings. (然而，我们经常听到他们用“幸运”或“感激”这样的词来描述自己的感受)”可知，幸存者在接受采访。选项 A“At first glance, this response does not make much sense.(乍一看，这种反应毫无依据)”中的“response”和上文一致，同时引出下文。故选A。

【38题详解】

根据上文“Some psychologists have argued that one of the benefits of counterfactual thinking is that it can be an effective tool for making us more resilient (迅速复苏的).(一些心理学家认为，反事实思维的好处之一是，它可以成为让我们更快复苏的有效工具)”可知，这里指的是反事实思维的好处。选项G“The mind of the counterfactual thinker can easily imagine circumstances that would have been even worse.(反事实思考者的头脑很容易想象出更糟糕的情况)”既分析了受害者为什么会说自己幸运，又引出下文“That paves the way for positive emotions that might help them through a very dark time in their lives.(这为积极情绪铺平了道路，可能会帮助他们度过生命中非常黑暗的一段时间)”，再次强调了反事实思维的好处。故选G。

【39题详解】

根据下文“Many psychologists believe that it exists to helps us crystallize (变明确) the goals that are most important to us and to improve our ability to wisely choose future courses of action.(许多心理学家认为它的存在是为了帮助我们明确对我们最重要的目标，并提高我们明智地选择未来行动路线的能力)”可知，这里介绍了反事实思维对我们的益处。选项C“Even though it sometimes makes us sad, it can also do us some good.(尽管有时它会让我们悲伤，但它也能给我们带来一些好处)”与下文内容一致。故选C。

第三部分 书面表达(共两节，32分)

第一节(共4小题;第40、41题各2分，第42题3分，第43题5分，共12分)

阅读下面短文，根据题目要求用英文回答问题。请在答题卡指定区域作答。

For many, theater is more than entertainment; it is a vital way to build psychological skills-especially empathy, or our ability to share, understand and care about others' emotions.

Research found that after watching theater, audience expressed more empathy for the characters onstage. The plays also changed behavior. Researchers gave audience members the option to donate some of their payment to charity. After seeing the plays, audience members donated more money to charity-whether or not the charity was related to the topics in the plays.

Why does live theater have these effects? Sitting in the dark watching a play can make us forget our own worries and transport us into the life and mind of a different person. We found that the more people reported feeling “immersed” or “lost” in the play, the more their beliefs and behaviors were changed by it.

A classic finding in social psychology is that repeated, positive encounters with people unlike ourselves can build empathy. Many of us have too few experiences-or too little interest-in creating such encounters. Theaters provide the chance to see the experiences of people who differ from us in environments unlike our own.

The arts are essential to human flourishing(繁荣).As we move beyond the pandemic, we will need to focus on healing collectively and connecting better. Providing greater access to the arts-and using them to share stories across cultural and social difference-will be an important part of this path to recovery.

40. What is empathy?

41. According to the research, what effects did live theater have on audience?

42. Please decide which part is false in the following statement, then underline it and explain why.

Theater can build empathy because it offers us encounters that remind us of our past experiences.

43. Besides watching live theater. what other way(s) can help to build empathy? (In about 40 words)

【40~43题答案】

【答案】40. Empathy is our ability to share, understand and care about others' emotions.

41. Live theater enabled audience to express more empathy for the characters onstage and change their behavior.

42. Theater can build empathy because it offers us encounters that remind us of our past experiences.

Theater can build empathy because it offers us encounters that help us see different experiences.

43. 言之有理即可。

【41 题详解】

考查细节理解。根据第三段"Sitting in the dark watching a play can make us forget our own worries and transport us into the life and mind of a different person. 【42 题详解】

考查推理判断。根据第四段"A classic finding in social psychology is that repeated, positive encounters with people unlike ourselves can build empathy. Many of us have too few experiences-or too little interest-in creating such encounters. Theaters provide the chance to see the experiences of people who differ from us in environments unlike our own.(社会心理学的一个经典发现是，与和自己不同的人反复积极地接触可以建立同理心。我们中的许多人在创造这样的邂逅方面经验太少——或者兴趣太少。戏剧提供了一个机会，让我们在不同的环境中看到与我们不同的人的经历。)"可知，戏剧能建立同理心的原因不是让我们想起以前的经历，而是戏剧给我们一些邂逅能够去体验不同的经历。所以原句中"remind us of our past experiences.(提醒我们过去的经历。)"是错的，故答案为 Theater can build empathy because it offers us encounters that remind us of our past experiences.

Theater can build empathy because it offers us encounters that help us see different experiences.

开放题。考生言之有理即可。参考答案为 Being on the stage can built empathy as well. For instance, taking acting classed can improve students' empathy. The same is true for experiencing more solitary art forms, such as reading. Even reading "Harry Potter" had been shown to reduce prejudice toward stigmatized groups in children. Or you can expand your empathy at home by picking up a novel.

How’s everything going? I’m writing to invite you to join in our school’s fitness program, One-hour Workout Every Day.

I know you’re really into sports, and the workout is just perfect for you. It’s a good chance to build up your body and sweat away your stress.

The workout is scheduled on every weekday from 5 pm to 6 pm. We will first gather at the school field for a 10-minute warmup. After that you can choose either to exercise indoors or outdoors. I’m looking forward to your participation.
