“Thanks for coming,” Everett said, shaking hands with Mr. Hanson, the town councillor(议员).

“I’m curious about the ideas in your letter.” Mr. Hanson nodded toward the parking lot near where they stood. “Please tell me more.”

Everett took a deep breath. “Ever since the school closed two years ago, this area has become worse. But if we clean up the litter and repair the fence, it will be a great place for a skateboard park.” Mr. Hanson scanned the broken concrete, nodding. “The old school is being adapted to a community arts centre. This area could become a vital part of the neighbourhood again.”

“Here’s a picture of a skateboard park in another town. Look how busy it is.” Everett was relieved that the community representative seemed receptive to the idea. Mr. Hanson studied the photograph, and then asked, “If town council provides the money, how will you and your friends contribute?” Everett felt optimistic now. “We’ll help design and build the ramps(坡道). More experienced boarders could give lessons to raise money!” Everett’s voice was enthusiastic.

However, Mr. Hanson said, “We’ll still need parking spaces, and the neighbours will not like late-night noise. They might worry about the crime of deliberately damaging public property and…."

"The skateboard park would use only the back corner, which isn't near any houses. Since young people already hang out here, why not give them something fun and physically active to do in their free time?" The lines over Mr. Hanson's forehead unwrinkled(舒展), and Everett's hopes rose again. "If everyone works together," Everett thought, "maybe this idea will become reality."

56. Where were Everett and Mr. Hanson talking?

A. In the city hall. B. Outside a park.

C. Near the parking lot. D. In the art centre.

57. Everett was trying to persuade Mr. Hanson to _____.

A. beautify the neighbourhood

B. cut the area of the parking lot

C. build an art centre for children

D. provide money for a skateboard park

58. How did Mr. Hanson finally feel about Everett's suggestion?

A. Curious. B. Hopeful. C. Enthusiastic. D. Receptive.

The extraordinary Eastgate Building in Harare, Zimbabwe's capital city, is said to be the only one in the world to use the same cooling and heating principles as the termite mound(白蚁堆).

Architect Mick Pearce used precisely the same strategy when designing the Eastgate Building, which has no air-conditioning and almost no heating. The building—the country's largest commercial and shopping complex—uses less than 10% of the energy of a conventional building of its size. The Eastgate's owners saved $3.5 million on a $36 million building because an air-conditioning plant didn't have to be imported.

The complex is actually two buildings linked by bridges across a shady, glass-roofed atrium(天井) open to the air. Fans suck fresh air in from the atrium, blow it upstairs through hollow spaces under the floors and from there into each office through baseboard vents(通风口). As it rises and warms, it is drawn out via ceiling vents and finally exists through forty-eight brick chimneys.

During summer's cool nights, big fans blow air through the building seven times an hour to cool the empty floors. By day, smaller fans blow two changes of air an hour through the building, to circulate the air which has been in contact with the cool floors. For winter days, there are small heaters in the vents.

This is all possible only because Harare is 1600 feet above sea level, has cloudless skies, little dampness and rapid temperature swings—days as warm as 31℃ commonly drop to 14℃ at night. "You couldn't do this in New York, with its fantastically hot summers and fantastically cold winters," Pearce said.

The engineering firm of Ove Arup&Partners monitors daily temperatures. It is found that the temperature of the building has generally stayed between 23℃ and 25℃, with the exception of the annual hot period just before the summer rains in October and three days in November, when a doorkeeper accidentally switched off the fans at night. And the air is fresh—far more so than in air-conditioned buildings, where up to 30% of the air is recycled.

63. Why was Eastgate cheaper to be built than a conventional building?

A. It was designed in a smaller size.

B. No air conditioners were fixed in.

C. Its heating system was less advanced.

D. It used rather different building materials.

64. What does "it" refer to in Paragraph 3?

A. Fresh air from outside. B. Heat in the building.

C. Hollow space. D. Baseboard vent.

65. Why would a building like Eastgate Not work efficiently in New York?

A. New York has less clear skies as Harare.

B. Its dampness affects the circulation of air.

C. New York covers a larger area than Harare.

D. Its temperature changes seasonally rather than daily.

66. The data in the last paragraph suggests Eastgate's temperature control system_____.

A. allows a wide range of temperatures

B. functions well for most of the year

C. can recycle up to 30% of the air

D. works better in hot seasons

D

Is the 'Go to College' Message Overdone?

Even in a weak job market, the old college try isn't the answer for everyone. A briefing paper from the Brookings Institution warns that "we may have overdone the message" on college, senior fellow Isabel Sawhill said.

"We've been telling students and their families for years that college is the only way to succeed in the economy and of course there's a lot of truth to that," Ms. Sawhill said. "On average it does pay off… But if you load up on a whole lot of student debt and then you don't graduate, that is a very bad situation."

One comment that people often repeat among the years of slow job growth has been the value of education for landing a job and advancing in a career. April's national unemployment rate stood at 7.5%, according to the Labor Department. The unemployment rate for high-school graduates over 25 years old who hadn't attended college was 7.4%, compared with 3.9% for those with a bachelor's degree or more education. The difference is even bigger among those aged 16-24. The jobless rate for those with only a high school diploma in that age group is about 20%. At the same time, recent research by Canadian economists cautions that a college degree is no guarantee of promising employment.

Ms. Sawhill pointed out that among the aspects that affect the value of a college education is the field of one's major: Students in engineering or other sciences end up earning more than ones who major in the arts or education. The cost of tuition and the availability of financial aid are other considerations, with public institutions generally a better financial bargain than private ones.

She suggested two avenues for improving the situation: increasing vocational(职业的)-technical training programs and taking a page from Europe's focus on early education rather than post-secondary learning. "The European countries put a little more attention to getting people prepared in the primary grades," she said. "Then they have a higher bar for whoever goes to college—but once you get into college, you're more likely to be highly subsidized(资助)."

She also is a supporter of technical training—to teach students how to be plumbers, welders and computer programmers—because "employers are desperate" for workers with these skills.

67. People usually think that _____.

A. the cost of technical schooling is a problem

B. one will not succeed without a college degree

C. technical skills are most important for landing a job

D. there is an increased competition in getting into a college

68. What does the underlined part "taking a page from" mean?

A. Hearing from. B. Changing from.

C. Differing from. D. Learning from.

69. What can we infer from the passage?

A. Public institutions charge more for education.

B. European universities are stricter with students.

C. Students with certain skills are in great demand.

D. Canadian students prefer to major in engineering.

70. Ms. Sawhill may probably agree that _____.

A. too much stress has been put on the value of college degrees

B. technical training is more important than college education

C. a college degree will ensure promising employment

D. it's easier for art students to find favorite jobs

第二节（共 5 小题；每小题 2 分，共 10 分）

根据短文内容，从短文后的七个选项中选出能填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

The Importance of Accessibility Awareness

At a recent Teen Leadership of Jewish Family Services meeting, people with disabilities talked about their lives. __71__ However, what amazed me most was the great importance of education about handicap accommodations (残疾人便利设施).

One school-teacher who is blind, and a woman who has used a wheelchair all her life are two important members of the National Group for Disabled Persons, devoted to raising awareness about disabilities. __72__ These include handicap parking spots, handrails, and wheelchair ramps. One big concern is the people who take advantage of aids, such as handicap parking spaces. __73__ And the meeting focused on educating the public.

Some handicap spots have extra room next to them, marked with the "No Parking" signs. "As long as I'm not in the spot, I can take the no-parking area next to it," some people say. However, the woman who uses a wheelchair disagrees to this. The space exists to allow someone in a wheelchair to have room to get in or out of their car. __74__

Some walkways have handrails next to them to help those who require extra assistance. Whether it is a blind person seeking guidance or an elderly person seeking support, the rail is there for walking. Sometimes the rail is blocked, by a parked bicycle for instance, and consequently made useless. __75__ People who are informed of the rail's use would be less likely to mistake it for a bike rack.

Meeting some of the people who are affected by the lack of education about accommodations made me see that there is work to be done. If more people were educated about the proper uses of accommodations, there would be fewer challenges for people with physical disabilities.

A. Accommodations will vary according to the needs of the disabled.
B. As with the parking spot, this is more likely a case of lack of education.
C. They educate about all the accommodations for people with disabilities.
D. Improvement must be made so that disabled people can fully participate.
E. If there is a car in that space, the handicap parking spot is no longer useful.
F. So people without disabilities need to be educated about these accommodations.
G. I was amazed to hear about the challenges faced by people with physical disabilities.

四、One possible version

October 10th was the birthday of our school. Our class did a lot for this year's anniversary celebration. The day before the celebration, we did a thorough cleaning and beautified the schoolyard with balloons and flags, which surely created a festive atmosphere. We also helped prepare an exhibition of school history. On that special day, some of the classmates served as volunteers, welcoming the guests at the school gate. During the celebration, some teachers and students put on performances, which greatly impressed the guests. All the people really had a good time and treasured countless memories.

W: What kind of sports do you like?
M: I like almost all sports, especially skating and mountain climbing.
W: Cool! I like swimming and tennis.

M: Hello. What's the price of an airmail letter to the USA?

W: That's twenty-four pence and it's no difference in price whether it's for the USA or anywhere else.

Text 3

W: Hey. Where are you?

M: In Heathrow Airport. My plane leaves in an hour.

W: What time do you expect to arrive?

M: Around 7 pm.

W: Ok. Ring me up when you arrive.

W: Good morning, Jack. You're here early.

M: Hey, Sally. I like to come in early. I can really get a lot of work done when it's quiet.

W: Me too. Hey, we should carpool, you know, drive to work together to save some gas.

M: Hmm, great idea. We'll save money, too!

W: Sorry not to have seen you last night.

M: I'm sure I missed a lot of fun.

W: You sure did. It was a great party. What was the matter with you?

M: Well, mom started having a headache suddenly at 5.

W: Then?

M: Then she had a temperature and we rushed her to hospital in the evening.

W: Did you spend the night at hospital?

M: Not me. My father did. I was there for 3 hours since 7.

W: How is she now? Is she still there at hospital?

M: She's doing better but the doctor says she must be there till tomorrow.

W: I wish your mother a speedy recovery.

M: Thank you.

M: Hi, Mary. Are you going to the culture festival on Saturday?

W: No, I can't. I work part-time in the afternoons. How about you?

M: I can't either. I work part-time, too—in the afternoons and the evenings.

W: Sounds tiring. What do you usually do on Saturday nights?

M: Uh, I usually meet my friends. How about you?

W: I'm usually pretty tired after working, so I just relax at home and do homework in the evening. I get up early on Sundays and do the cleaning.

M: You do the cleaning on Sunday morning? Wow, I'm still in bed sleeping. And then I play basketball.

W: Thanks for staying tuned to our programme. Our next item is really interesting. Twins are quite the fashion nowadays—there are books about twins, websites about twins, twins even have their own festivals and clubs. We've sent our reporter, Trevor Williams, to America to find out firsthand information about a very special twins place. Trevor, can you hear me?

M: Yes, Karen, loud and clear.

W: And where are you today, Trevor?

M: As you can see, I'm here in the heart of New York City, in an amazing place to eat—Twins Restaurant.

W: Well, then Trevor, what can you tell us about the restaurant?

M: Well, Karen, I spoke to the owners, twins Debbie and Lisa Ganz. They told me that all the waiters and waitresses in their restaurant are identical twins—37 pairs in all—and they always work at the same time, at the same tables.

W: Don't the customers get confused?

M: That's part of the fun! And by the way, if one twin is ill, the other one needn't bother to show up for work. They are only allowed to work in pairs.

W: Unbelievable!

W: Hello, can I help you?

M: Oh hello. Um, is that Mill House Farm?

W: Yes.

M: Oh, um, you're the owner, Mrs…?

W: Jane Hawk, Mrs Jane Hawk, H-A-W-K.

M: Right, thanks. Well, I'd like to book a few nights in July for a group of students from York High School if the price is reasonable.

W: We charge £4 a night per student.

M: Oh, well, that's very good. What does that include exactly?

W: Well, all the equipment is very basic. We have big clean areas, with wooden floors, so there's lots of space to sleep. No bathrooms or hot water of course! Just cold water for washing.

M: I see—a bit of a shock for the students! Um, and what about food?

W: They do their own cooking. They'll have to bring sleeping bags and their own food with them.

M: Right, it sounds great! Well, I've got 40 students ….
